

Zephyranthes atamasco

Atamasco Lily, Rain Lily

Zephyranthes atamasco is a lilylike plant, native to the Coastal Plain region. The flowers are white, sometimes with a pinkish tinge and first appear in late winter and continue into mid spring. The flowers are on an elongate flower stalk separate from the leaves. Flowers have 6 petals and an elongate pistil. The base of each flower is surrounded with elongate green bracts. Leaves are elongate, grasslike, thickened, and slightly concave. The plant arises from a bulb. Atamasco Lily is a species of wet habitats, including swamps and marshes.

Height: 10-15"

Spread: 1 ½' – 2'